

Ecuadorian Vegetable Ivory

Tagua

Tagua

Tagua Palm, also called ivory palm, is a more humane substitute for elephant ivory and traded as vegetable ivory today.

When the kernel is dried out, it can be carved just like elephant ivory; it is used for jewelry, figurines and can also be dyed.

Usage of Tagua advances important environmental and socioeconomic goals by stimulating local indigenous, heritage economies and microenterprises in South America.
